"And," continued the remorseless surgeon, "in a tone of the kindest commiseration, "in the absence of the least esprit de corps, and decorum et pro patria mori feeling you it is apparent that none of your mental processes are going on properly, which damages everything."

"I've sent home to die!" whimpered the wretched Joe.

"Not in your present condition. I notice, in agreeable. It is so nice in that Dr. Denslow up you along as he does. But then that is not the only thing that I like. I like to be old one for that matter. Still, I would not thank him so much.

It is not at all well; my heart gives me so much more—more than ever before—and as you say about coming home I have about concluded to try what a change of climate and scene will do for me, so I have concluded to accept of Aunt Tabitha's invitation to go and spend time with her. Unless you hear from me to the contrary, which you will probably not, as the area is uncertain in Kentucky, you had better direct your next letter to me at Eau Claire, at least.

“I do not care to come to the meeting,” she says, “that is—it is—
“But
else?”
“Oh
“I question
matter.”

"I care for you ever so much. I am grateful for all that you have been done for me, but I have a feeling that I must leave you. I shall return the love you profess for me, but I even entertain a feeling resembling remorse, and certainly not at this time. I think you certainly do not love anyone else."

"I beg of you not to question me," said I. "I have no right to ask you such a question. I have no right to pry into any of your secrets. I have no right to think that which you do not choose to reveal to me."

Thank ter yo a moment in private, 'y," she replied. "Come right in."

theroom he closed the door behind him and made a minute survey of the and other points of vantage for the. This done, he returned to the and was watching his operations with curiosity, and said:

"Down. I guess no one'll overhear."

"Senny idea who I am?" he asked.
